MODELS DESIGNED TO “CHEAT THE EYE”

The growth in our production has meant that we continually face challenges in combining modern materials and production techniques with traditional crafts and modelling methods. Every model is a trick played on the eye, attempting to represent, as closely as possible, a variety of different materials, whether they be rubber, glass, aluminium, steel or carbon with convincing scale effect.

Whilst we can obtain the precise paint used by the original manufacturer of a car, it cannot be used on our models. A real car's fine metallic paint would resemble coarse metal flake if used on a 1/43rd scale model. So we have to use a finer metallic paint if our model is to look right.

We do not use one piece, injection molded plastics for our cars' windscreens and windows. The resulting over-scale thickness and loss of transparency would be unacceptable to us. So we use die-cut PVC for each separate window and windscreen. This is more delicate, expensive and painstaking to assemble but worth it to us, for the improvement in realism.

Our models' paintwork is often hand polished on buffing wheels because imperfections and blemishes on our models' surface would scale up badly.

As always, we continue to visit racetracks, museums, car shows and private collections in our efforts to photograph details that can make or break the successful reproduction in miniature of the cars that most of us will never be able to own in full size. We've been doing this for years and still enjoy it.
